A. RESEARCH ENDEAVOURS (citation counts are Scopus)

Basic cognitive research → Theoretical model → Intervention research

I use my work on cognition mechanisms to build theoretical models, which I then use to develop interventions to test the models and improve individuals' cognitive functioning. My PhD and postdoctoral work involving attention helped build a model of the attentional mechanisms of mindfulness (Bishop et al., 2004, 4,379 citations), a proposal I later tested in Anderson et al. (2007) (208 citations) and was incorporated into the Toronto Mindfulness Scale (Lau et al., 2006, 819 citations). Building from my studies on errorless learning (EL; e.g., Anderson & Craik, 2006, 62 citations, one of 12 papers on the topic), we developed EL interventions for people with semantic dementia (Jokel et al., 2010, 93 citations; Jokel & Anderson, 2012, 81 citations; Jokel et al., 2016, 34 citations). I turned my work on age-related recollection deficits (e.g., Anderson et al., 2008, 125 citations) into an intervention study in which we raised older adults' recollection abilities significantly above that of young adults (Anderson et al., 2018, 9 citations), and my model of the benefits of volunteering among seniors (Anderson et al., 2014, 299 citations) into a volunteering intervention (Anderson et al., soon to be re-submitted). We translated our foundational work on aMCI into practice by developing and validating an intervention in Troyer et al. (2008) (150 citations), and a book for a lay audience, Anderson et al. (2012), Living with mild cognitive impairment: A guide to maximizing brain health and reducing risk of dementia (Oxford), >7,000 copies sold, of which the second edition was published in March, 2024.

Amnesic mild cognitive impairment

Much of my research has focused on the underlying mnemonic processes affected in aMCI. We demonstrated impairments in recollection but not familiarity in Anderson et al. (2008, 125 citations), and impaired item but not associative memory in Troyer et al. (2008, 76 citations), and described the relationships among associative recognition, hippocampal volume, and apolipoprotein E in Troyer et al. (2012, 53 citations). I have also examined the effects of EL in aMCI in Lubinsky et al. (2009, 37 citations); Anderson et al. (2012, 12 citations); Roberts et al. (2018, 14 citations), and Callahan & Anderson (2019, 7 citations).

Effects of divided attention on memory

My dissertation, Anderson et al. (1998, 314 citations, top 5 most cited papers in this journal between 1998 and 2002 [c.f. Zacks et al., 2006, Psychology and Aging]), discovered greater effects of divided attention on encoding than retrieval, even though retrieval was more attention demanding, particularly for older adults. This work built upon Craik et al. (1997, 810 citations), and we later replicated and extended these findings in PET studies, Anderson et al. (2000, 200 citations), and Lidaka et al. (2000, 113 citations).

The impact of my research can be indexed in part by my H-Index of 35 (Scopus) or 42 (Google Scholar), with 12,376 (Scopus) or 26,301 (Google Scholar) citations. Importantly, although the mean impact factor of the journals I tend to publish in is 4.5 (2022 Impact Factors), the mean impact factor of my papers (calculable for 1996-2022) is 8.1, with a mean number of citations per paper of 117 (Scopus) and 251 (Google Scholar). Moreover, my papers continue to have impact, with all but two cited in the last two years. Recent reviews of my NSERC application noted “[this applicant] publishes in top tier journals in cognitive science (e.g., JEP:LMC, Psych Bull, PBR, Journal of Cognitive Neuroscience).”

Other evidence of the impact of my research includes the delivery of the Learning the Ropes for Living with MCI program, which I co-developed, to over 30 sites around the world, the interest of government officials and policy makers (e.g., Justin Trudeau, Elizabeth May, Minister Alice Wong, and Ontario Seniors’ Secretariat - see National Knowledge Translation 2015 Jan and 2012 Nov and Provincial/Regional Knowledge Translation 2014 Jan), the desire of Canadian and international trainees to work with me, and the invitations to give keynote and plenary talks at international conferences. The design of our Kimel Family Centre for Brain Health and Wellness, the world’s first community centre delivering personalized dementia risk programming, is being scaled to Aspen Tree in Bangkok, Thailand.

I have delivered eight invited scientific presentations at international meetings (two of which were keynote), and eight at national meetings since my last promotion. Specifically, I was an invited Visiting Professor at Chiang Mai University in Thailand in 2019, and was invited to give a keynote overview on current trends in research on mild cognitive impairment at the Cognitive Aging Conference in Atlanta in 2016, and a keynote at the Social Capital and Healthy Aging conference in 2014, an international conference that meets in a different country every two years, in which I describe social contributors to cognitive health and dementia risk in late life. The organizers of that conference were so impressed by my address that they asked me - the only speaker who was not a social economist - to contribute a chapter to a book they published on social capital and aging. I was also invited to deliver a colloquium at Wake Forest University, where I was asked to discuss my research on the effects of metabolic dysfunction on cognitive and brain healthy among seniors.

I am a Fellow of the American Psychological Association, Gerontological Society of America, and Psychonomic Society, and was invited to be a member of an international working group developing best practices for non-pharmacologic interventions for Alzheimer’s disease and its prodromal stages. I am an invited Member of the Canadian Longitudinal Study on Aging Psychological Health Working Group, and a Member of the Canadian Consortium on Neurodegeneration in Aging Neuropsychology Group, helping to define the neuropsychological and psychological tests included in those latter two large clinical trials. I am also an invited participant of the 5th Canadian Consensus Conference on the Diagnosis and Treatment of Dementia, and contributed to recommendations for the psychosocial interventions subgroup, and was a Subject Matter Expert for the Landmark Study from the Alzheimer Society of Canada (2022). I was recently elected as a member of the Memory Disorders Research Society (2022), an invitation-only professional society dedicated to the study of memory. I have sat on review panels for CIHR and the Alzheimer Society of Canada for numerous years, and most recently have been a Scientific Officer for the Biological and Clinical Aspects of Aging CIHR panel. Finally, I was Associate Editor of the Journal of Gerontology: Psychological Sciences between 2014 and 2019, for which I was Decision Editor for 326 submissions, and Edited three special issues for the journal (Cognitive Aging, Cognitive Neuroscience of Aging, and State of the Science on Mild Cognitive Impairment). I was nominated to become Editor in Chief of this journal, but declined the nomination as I wanted to focus on three large clinical trials I was launching.

I have held continuous funding as a principal investigator since my first scientific appointment in 2000, with the exception of an 18-month window during the funding ‘recession’ caused by the upheavals at CIHR. Even during this window, I was Site Leader of a large CCNA trial, and Clinical Trial Leader of another CCNA trial, and co-investigator on five other grants. In total, I have earned over $25.8 million in research funding as a Principal Investigator or Co-Principal investigator, and have contributed to a further $39.8 million as a Co-Investigator or Collaborator, for a total of $65.6 million in research funding. Note that I do dry lab research, with little in the way of supply or equipment costs.
